Install the Software on your PC.How does a company go from being seen as a Silicon Valley “unicorn” to a classic dot-com flop? Not because of poor planning or management, but because of the vagaries of the market. Speaking Tuesday at the University of Chicago Booth School of Business,

Niklas Zennström, co-founder of Skype, said the Cambridge-based venture used the city’s tech ecosystem to its advantage, hiring smart people and moving quickly, but also not underestimating the “natural volatility” of the tech market. “We all want to be in Silicon Valley, which is a very common idea, but we all know what it takes to be there,” Zennström said. “The biggest mistake that most people make is that they don’t really know how the place works. They think that it’s easy, when in reality, it’s not.” Zennström is the managing director of Atomico Ventures, the investment arm of the venture capital firm Atomico, which backed Skype. As he spoke, he was dressed in a black Atomico suit, his tie neatly trimmed and
